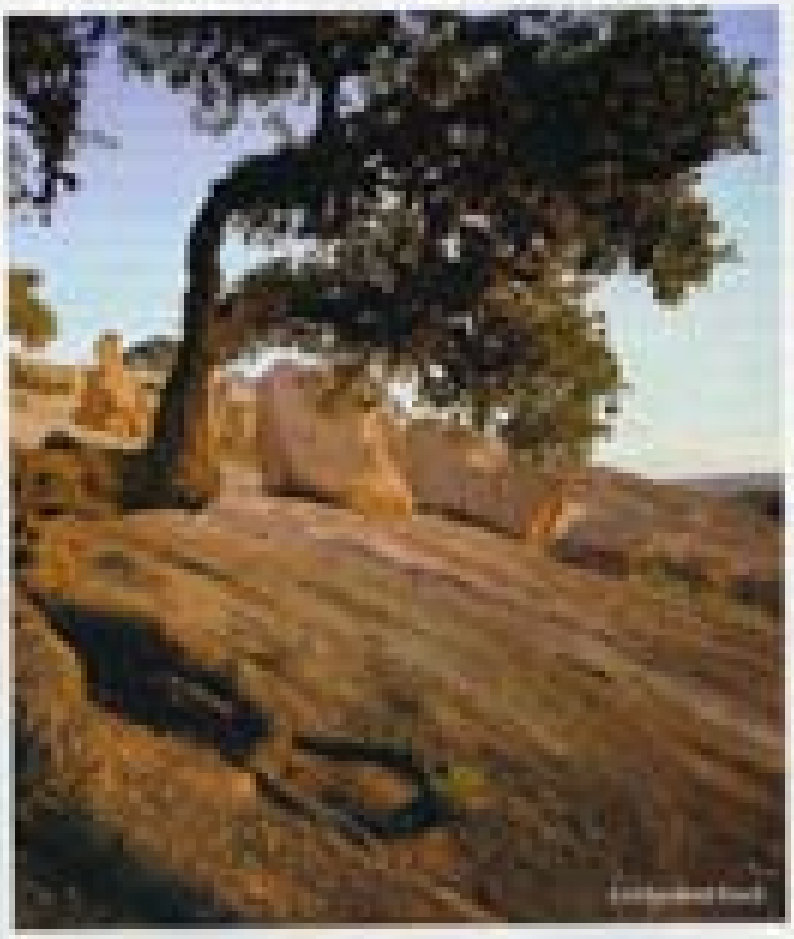
5 Great Places Every Texan Should See

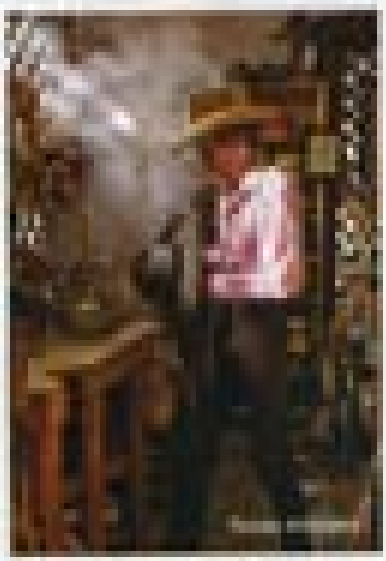
Everyone knows The Alamo and the State Fair. These five Lone Star originals also demand a spot on every Texan bucket list. By TAYLOR BRUCE

Enchanted Rock, Fredericksburg

At 425 feet high, the 10,000-year-old granite dome might not be Texas's most impressive climb, but it's no doubt the most bizarre. Hiking the 1,000 plus steps on Big Sandy Creek Rock with the work hard/play hard crowd among monolithic greenhouse ranch of Fredericksburg. Closely studied and greatly odd to the uninitiated, it's indisputable that the overall have to do with the strong and telling of stamps. Nonetheless, kids and grown-ups alike have this natural wonder and constant an ongoing debate about the best pattern on the rock rock. Bring a map to the height of this or connecting a fellow-over by night.

Details: 17 miles north of Fredericksburg on Ranch Road 965; spadi.state.tx.us





Manny Gammage's Texas Humors, Lockhart

When you walk in the door of Manny Gammage's Texas Humors, you are one step closer to a wing-loving landmark for the Robert Denoff's in Lonesome Dove. Even if you aren't a cowboy, and politely to pack into the back room to watch the wee hours should be much. Joel Gammage, Manny's grandson, is the owner Gammage to continue the legacy with Manny's tin-hanger and 100-year-old wood blocks and hanger, with a promise to find your perfect pair of boots and cover all costs. Whether it's Ruffin Cards Boots, or their annual Visit Round hat style, the craft is working low that all are. And certainly a quintessential Texas rite of passage.

Details: 800 South Commercial Street; manmanhumors.com; [illegible]